Time to Twitter

Every year there is a new internet phenomenon. In the past we have seen e-mail, Google, Messenger, Wikipedia, YouTube, Facebook etc. The latest (1) sensation is called Twitter and it is based (2) in Silicon Valley, California. It is very popular in the United States, Britain and Japan. It works much the same as a blog.

Twitter is a free “social networking system” like Facebook that has changed the way in which many people communicate. The difference is that you write messages with a maximum of 140 characters (3). In your message you answer only one simple question: “What are you doing now?” Once a tweet is posted on the website, people are able to easily see what other people are doing. As long as an answer is 140 characters or less, it is possible for thousands of people to see the answer immediately. It is very easy to do, you just sign up (registration is free), pick up a user name and you can design your Twitter home page by unloading an image or choosing web colours.

Twitter is popular (4) with normal people but it is also popular with celebrities who use it as a blog. Barack Obama, John McCain, Gordon Brown and Britney Spears all like Twitter. The simple format makes Twitter easy to use from a mobile phone. Many guests at Obama’s presidential inauguration wrote Twitter messages during the ceremony. People watching on television complained about it.

A Twitter message is called a tweet. “Tweet” is literally the sound of a small bird, so the symbol on the twitter website is a bird on a tree. The word twitter also refers to the sound of birds singing. Humans can also twitter when they talk quickly or nervously. In British English a twit is a stupid person.

Twitter may not be an intelligent word, but is the new digital activity and it is replacing “chat” as the most important way (5) of communication. Will Twitter replace Facebook? Who knows?. According to the British newspaper “The Financial Times”, last year Facebook offered to buy Twitter for $500million and Twitter said no.
